Welcome to the 11th year of a unique international exchange between Americans and Australians taking place in the United States Congress!

History

In 1999, an educational and professional internship opportunity was designed and created in Washington, DC exclusively for Australian university students. Personalized experiences and attention in the Nation’s Capital have been hallmarks of this exchange from a modest beginning of 5 students put forward by a single Australian institution, with the first group arrived in January of 2000. By 2003 the demand in Washington for more Australian student interns and for greater diversity in field study led naturally into an expansion since known as the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Programme. UCWIP today includes 8 participating Australian universities as programmatic partners and works to match 12 students annually and exclusively to Congressional offices.

Principles and Achievement

A core principle of the UCWIP is to match good people with good people in good places. 93 students have been successfully matched across the first 10 years, including the single-uni beginnings. Internship prospects are offered in Democratic and Republican offices; personal and committee offices; the House and the Senate; and one congressional commission office. Matched students are drawn from many academic disciplines including international relations, politics, commerce, law, political communications, economics, science, and of course American studies. The success of UCWIP is owed to the commitments of many individuals towards enhancing American-Australian relationships. In the first decade, 18 statements in the Congressional Record along with news media accounts in both countries have confirmed the importance and value of this concept. In 2006, two speeches in the Australian Parliament extended this official recognition to Hansard.

Practices

UCWIP interns are accorded significant access to the US political system and institutions across their two-month, full-time internships each January/February. In-office experiences will vary widely according to the needs of the congressional hosts. Administrative functions, constituent liaison, and legislative research and support have been among the touchstones of past internships. Offices typically encourage interns to attend hearings, briefings and press conferences both on and off Capitol Hill. UCWIP has also organized briefings at the US State Department and the Australian Embassy; roundtable discussions with National Journal’s senior congressional reporter; access to political events; a day-trip to Gettysburg National Military Park in Pennsylvania; and a day-trip to the origins of the American republic in Philadelphia’s Independence Hall, Congress Hall and the National Constitution Center in Philadelphia.

For the 2010 program, 17 congressional offices form the universe of prospective hosts:

- Rep. Mike Castle (Republican of Delaware)
- Rep. James Clyburn (Democrat of South Carolina)/House Majority Whip’s office
- Rep. Joe Courtney (Democrat of Connecticut)
- Sen. Mike Crapo (Republican of Idaho)
- Rep. Lincoln Diaz-Balart (Republican of Florida)
- Sen. Christopher Dodd (Democrat of Connecticut)
- Del. Eni Faleomavaega (Democrat of American Samoa)
- Rep. Sam Farr (Democrat of California)
- Rep. Alcee Hastings (Democrat of Florida)
- Rep. Jerrold Nadler (Democrat of New York)
- Rep. Ileana Ros-Lehtinen (Republican of Florida)
UCWIP offers individualized attention to the student interns before, during and after their internships. Notable measures of intern success have included numerous letters of recommendation from congressional hosts; Floor recognition for legislative work; extended internships; a Member request to recruit a student for an American summer internship; and at least a half-dozen congressional job offers, with two accepted. Alumni later pursuing other work in the public sector have attained positions in the Prime Minister’s office, in a variety of federal departments and agencies in Canberra, at the Australian Consulate in New York, at the Australian Embassy in Washington, DC, at the World Bank in Washington, DC, and most recently at the Australian Mission to the United Nations.

Leadership

UCWIP was created in Washington, DC by Eric K. Federing, who has directed and managed the program pro bono since its inception a decade ago. Federing was a senior congressional advisor for a dozen years, serving as communications director/press secretary for Rep. Norm Mineta of California, the House Transportation Committee, and Sen. Joe Lieberman of Connecticut. Federing is now Executive Director, Business and Public Policy, Office of Government Affairs for KPMG LLP, the global audit, tax and advisory services firm. From 1992 through 1998 while still a congressional staffer, Federing conducted frequent speaking tours at numerous universities, business groups, and think tanks across Australia regarding American government, politics and news media. He is a Board member of the National Conference on Citizenship, a congressionally-chartered non-profit in the U.S. In 2004, Federing received a KPMG Chairman’s Award for Excellence in Volunteerism in Washington, DC in recognition of UCWIP. Partnering in the UCWIP effort is Daphne Clones Federing, herself a former congressional staff veteran (as a senior economist with the Joint Economic Committee) and Federing’s wife.

Applications and Preparations

Each participating university determines administrative and application procedures in conjunction with UCWIP and university policies. Internships are unpaid and must be conducted for university course credit. Deadlines are uniform and set by UCWIP. Annual telebriefings are scheduled with individual universities and interested applicants in late April and early May. Applications in hard-copy are due to UCWIP by June 15th. UCWIP then works to propose matches by the end of June, with matches confirmed in July. Planning a personal budget and fundraising cannot be overemphasized. Air travel, accommodations, commuting, food, visa, etc. are estimated to be A$9,000+. Student interns in 2009 reported and recommended an overall budget of A$15,000+, assuming an exchange rate of A$1 = US$.65.

UCWIP is competitive and seeks mature, engaging, articulate students to serve as ambassadors for themselves, their universities, and Australia. In each of the last 5 years, more than 60 applications were received for review. The Programme applies no quotas of any sort. Applicants are asked to demonstrate an understanding for and an appreciation of the American political process. Students should aspire to benefit from the experience academically, professionally, culturally, and personally. Academic study is only one of many factors considered. Paid and voluntary work experiences are also important. Sophisticated interpersonal skills, resourcefulness and knowledge are exceptionally important. Critical selection factors include a free-style essay explaining why this opportunity is of interest. Applications then ask students to choose up to four of the listed congressional offices and explain why each is of interest. UCWIP works to find the best ‘match’ taking all these factors into account.

UCWIP respects interns as young professionals. Resources offered include safe-and-secure upmarket sharehouse arrangements in northern Virginia; counsel towards the US Government-required J1 visa; and continual on-the-ground guidance. The J1 visa is obtained by each successfully-matched student through US consulates (typically Sydney, Melbourne and Perth) and in direct conjunction with their congressional hosts, a process enabled through the Council for International Educational Exchanges; CIEE’s Australian affiliate is Student Placement Australia. All internships evolve into direct relationships between congressional host and student, the accommodations provider and student, etc. UCWIP is the organizer, facilitator, advisor, quality controller and risk mitigator. Only Australian citizens (including dual nationals) enrolled within the 8 participating universities are eligible to apply and should do so through:

Australians interning on Capitol Hill this winter say the biggest surprise about American politics is how friendly people are….

“I’ve had people say, ‘Are you English? Are you Australian?’” says 19-year-old Alex Maschmedt of his phone conversations with Rep. Mike Castle’s (R-Del.) constituents. “I find that if people do pick up on the accent, they haven’t reacted any other way than very friendly.”

His countryman John Fowler, 23, an intern for Rep. Loretta Sanchez (D-Calif.), says he was taken aback by the collegial atmosphere in Congress. “I expected it to be a bit more rigid,” he says, adding that he was pleasantly surprised to see that many lawmakers don’t take themselves too seriously.

Perhaps Maschmedt, Fowler and the 10 other Australians here as part of the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program are being generous with their compliments. Their two-month-long stints have already exposed them to the friendly and not-so-friendly aspects of politics in America, yet they nearly always seem to find the bright side.

“It’s this sense of personal growth, enterprise and being able to represent yourself so well so young,” says [Eric] Federing, a former Capitol Hill staffer….

Federing started the program after vacationing in Australia in 1992 and noticing from Australians both a curiosity regarding American government as well as misinformation about his home country. He returned to Australia several more times and began mulling the idea of an exchange between the two countries. …

“I believe Congress is one of the great meeting places on this planet,” he says….

Federing donates all of his time to organizing the program, and now has some 60 yearly applicants from whom to choose 12 participants, who fund the internship on their own. Federing custom matches the interns to a participating congressional office according to their goals and interests.

Many lawmakers see the value of the cultural exchange.

“We have found it very helpful,” says Sen. Mike Crapo (R-Idaho), who recalls having hosted at least two or three Australian interns. “They’ve been able to provide some diversity” in the office, and have exposed his staff to different points of view, he says.

Sen. Ben Cardin (D-Md.) agrees that it has been nice to get “input from someone from that part of the world.” “It’s an incredible insight in our office,” he says.

This year’s interns watch their bosses closely and have seized on the opportunities their offices have given them. One intern couldn’t attend a group interview with The Hill because he was accompanying House Majority Whip James Clyburn (D-S.C.) to the Democratic retreat in Virginia. Another is extending her internship in Sen. Chris Dodd’s (D-Conn.) office beyond the Feb. 27 end date….
One of Maschmedt’s highlights in Castle’s office was a trip to the congressman’s district before Inauguration activities. He helped the congressman distribute tickets to his constituents. “It was extremely interesting to see people’s faces,” Maschmedt says. “I never expected in my life I’d end up in Wilmington, Del., handing out tickets to the Inauguration.”

Down-Under Interns

By Timothy Taylor February 8, 2006

(excerpts)

Instead of surfing and tanning, 12 Australian university students are spending their summer breaks in a cold and wintry Washington, D.C., to learn about the Congressional process and U.S.-Australian relations. The students are participating in the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship program, which selects undergraduates from seven of its participating Australian colleges and universities to come to Washington and partake in the political feast better known as Washington politics.

Ryan Conroy and Jessica Gurevich said that they have both come to enjoy their time in Washington for the [eight]-week internship program. Gurevich, who interns in Rep. Mike Castle’s (R-Del.) office, said that she could not have passed up the opportunity to work in Congress. She also described her colleagues as a “family,” in which she and her co-workers have taken a mutual liking for one another and have been able to learn of the cultural and political similarities and differences….

[Director and founder Eric] Federing likened the program to the Fulbright Scholar Program “with a twist” (Fulbright, sponsored by the State Department, allows students and other scholars to study in different sections of the world). However, he said that the Uni-Capitol program is unlike any other program because of its focus on the students as individuals.

The application process is key in pairing a student up with a host office, Federing said. Conroy, an international relations major with a focus on law and the arts, interns in the office of Rep. Sam Farr (D-Calif.), who serves on the Appropriations subcommittee on Agriculture, rural development, Food and Drug Administration and related agencies, which has congressional oversight of the Health and Human Services Department. Conroy said that he is interested in both international and domestic policies and health issues … Conroy added that working in Farr's has afforded him the opportunity to attend briefings on such issues as a United Nations response fund to assist developing countries.

AUSTRALIAN UNIVERSITY STUDENTS AS AMBASSADORS TO AND FROM CONGRESS

SPEECH OF HON. JERROLD NADLER OF NEW YORK IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
February 4, 2004

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, there is a long list of people and institutions that have helped our nation flourish through our nearly 228 years of independence. One of our greatest traditions as Americans is to welcome friends from around the world into our lives--sometimes professionally and sometimes personally.

Most congressional offices host American college students, to help our nation's future leaders understand the political complexities affecting our constituents and our jobs as their representatives. Now, thanks to the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program, some of Australia's best and brightest university students have had the opportunity to participate in six-week, full-time internships in House and Senate offices. These internships have proved to be an invaluable learning experience, both for the students and for their hosts.

IN HONOR OF THE UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

SPEECH OF HON. MICHAEL N. CASTLE OF DELAWARE IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
February 15, 2005

Mr. CASTLE. Mr. Speaker, each year America hosts thousands of foreign students from around the globe. For those of us who develop a professional or personal relationship with any of these individuals, we are truly enriched by their different perspective on the world.…
For over 100 years, Australia and the United States have enjoyed a unique partnership that has endured world wars, economic malaise, and our current battle with terrorism. This tradition continues through the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program, which provides Australian students with the opportunity to experience American democracy first-hand through internships with Congressional offices.

UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM
SENATOR DEBBIE STABENOW OF MICHIGAN
January 26, 2006

Ms. STABENOW. Mr. President, each year congressional offices host American college students as interns, to help our future leaders learn about public service and see how their Government works firsthand. Today, I would like to let you know about a program that gives Australian students the opportunity to experience our democratic and legislative process. It's called the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program.... Twelve of Australia's brightest are here, pursuing knowledge and understanding. In so doing, we are all finding new reasons to like an old friend….

The selection process for the students is competitive and intellectually rigorous, ensuring the highest quality applicant. All participating students are comprehensively matched with a congressional office and corresponding position. They come from a wide range of academic disciplines and bring as much knowledge and understanding to our offices as they take away….

Australia continues to be one of America's strongest allies. Our greatest gift is the friendship born of shared values. I thank the Uni-Capitol Program and these Australian interns for their hard work, and I wish the program continued success.

UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM
STATEMENT OF SENATOR MIKE CRAPO OF IDAHO
January 23, 2007

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, as modern communication makes our world increasingly smaller, linking global societies at unprecedented business, government and social levels, it is critical that America and other democracies worldwide engage in a process of ongoing co-education about the efforts and work of democratic governments. This educational exchange is best facilitated by hands-on learning and personal experience. A terrific example of this effort is the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Programme, in which outstanding college students from seven of Australia's top universities compete for the opportunity to serve as interns for Members of the U.S. Congress….I am fortunate to be able to participate this year. Charis Tierney from Brisbane, Queensland, has been a wonderful addition to my office this winter. She says of this opportunity:

> The UCWIP has been a once in a lifetime to not only observe but participate in the work of the U.S. Congress. Working within Senator Crapo's office has given me the kind of unique appreciation for the United States Senate's work that can only be gained from behind the scenes. My daily interaction with the fantastic staff of the Senator's office has only enhanced the experience. …

This valuable program bridges the 9,000 miles that separate the United States and Australia with the friendship of shared experiences and realization and application of common goals and interests.

TRIBUTE TO THE UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM
SPEECH OF HON. JAMES E. CLYBURN OF SOUTH CAROLINA IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
February 8, 2007

Mr. CLYBURN. Madam Speaker, as we listen to our constituents, grapple with their needs, speak out, legislate, and otherwise work to improve their lives and the life of our Nation, we take great pride in the ability of Congress and our system of government to inspire the world beyond our borders. But just as important as this inspiration is the recognition of what we all can learn from that world, from people who want to study, visit or otherwise immerse themselves in this great institution as a means towards better understanding the United States.

For the last 8 years, a unique international exchange has taken place here in Congress. Future leaders of Australia have participated in what's known as the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program. Through this program each year, one dozen of Australia's best and brightest university students have been carefully matched to House and Senate offices for two-month full-time internships. These internships have enabled me and many of my colleagues to share our pride in the American republic while at the same time learning more firsthand about the Australian commonwealth, its people, its ideas, and our numerous shared values.

It is an understatement to say that Australia and the United States are close allies globally or that we merely have such similarities as vibrant democracies, free-enterprise economies, and diverse societies. We are in many ways close cousins with complex national histories. That is what these young Australians get to learn as they are welcomed here, and how we profit by their all-too-brief presence among us.
This year, it has been my pleasure to participate in this program for the third time and host Sylvia Gaston from the University of Melbourne. Her kindness, can-do spirit, eagerness to learn, and willingness to share her views with me and my staff have made her an exceptional ambassador for her university and for her country. During her time with us, the closeness of the Australian and American peoples is clearly evident, just as it is evident that this exchange is not merely an academic exercise or even confined to Congress. It is about building for tomorrow, about personal and professional growth, and about lasting international friendships.

Madam Speaker, my colleagues have recognized this effort over the years. I did so myself 4 years ago when the annual intern group was much smaller and drawn from only a single Australian university. It is heartening to see how much this program has grown, thrived, and how tribute has been paid not just here but in the Australian Parliament.

My great hope is not only that this program continues, but that others will be founded in its spirit and focused towards as many peoples and places as possible in our world.

HONORING THE UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

SPEECH OF HON. JOE COURTNEY OF CONNECTICUT IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
February 7, 2008

Mr. COURTNEY. Madam Speaker, for decades the United States has looked towards Australia as one of our closest of cultural, economic and security partners. This is true not just between the two governments but among Americans and Australians who have crossed the Pacific to visit with or work with each other. I am pleased to rise today to recognize the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program, which annually delivers some of Australia's best and brightest university students to a bipartisan and bicameral array of congressional offices for two-month internships.

This is the first year that I have been privileged to participate in the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program. A student emissary to my office, Anthony Bremner, has added first-hand value to our understanding of global issues and perspectives as seen from Australia. Anthony, who visits us from the University of Queensland, is a textbook example of the high caliber of this program. Over the past two months, he has applied his volunteer experiences from the constituency office of Australia's newly elected Prime Minister, Kevin Rudd, to my office. During this time, Anthony has attended committee briefings, drafted constituent correspondence, and assisted my staff with research.

Anthony is not alone in this effort. This year, a record 13 students from all across Australia were matched with as many congressional offices. They were drawn from seven Australian universities in four different states and the Australian Capital Territory. Far from a solely academic exercise, the Uni-Capitol program is a practical investment in our global community, given the diverse array of congressional participants and an equally diverse array of student interests ranging from law to commerce, from the environment to communications, from international affairs to American studies.

Madam Speaker, I would encourage all of my colleagues to seek connections with members of our global community. Similarly, I would encourage American university students to seek established and creative ways to connect with their counterparts around the globe. On this note, I ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing the contributions of the Uni-Capitol Internship Program and, again, thank Anthony Bremner for his participation and hard work.

UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAMME 2008

STATEMENT OF SENATOR MIKE CRAPO OF IDAHO
February 11, 2008

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, I am proud to be involved for a second year in the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Programme, an exchange program in which outstanding college students from Australia's top universities compete to serve as interns for the U.S. Congress. The program is in its ninth year of bringing the Washington experience to our friends from Australia, firsthand. In addition to working in congressional offices, the program provides students with a number of other opportunities and activities, including visits to historic sites, visits to government agencies, meetings with government leaders, and educational events.

This year, Suzi Allan, a student from the University of Canberra, Australia, is taking a 2-month hiatus from her communications degree to help me serve Idaho constituents. Of the program, Suzi says, "The UCWIP has given me the unique opportunity to gain firsthand insight into the world's most influential government. I have had incredible experiences while working in Senator Crapo's office and have enjoyed learning more about the U.S. Congress. Working in the heart of America's political establishment is a fantastic experience that I will always remember."
Free nations have a responsibility to work together to promote the liberty that have provided social, cultural, and economic success. Bringing young people together in their formative educational years promotes these partnerships for prosperity across national lines and highlights our Nations' shared goals and interests. I am pleased to be able to participate in this well-crafted and successful program.

IN HONOR OF THE UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

SPEECH OF HON. SAM FARR OF CALIFORNIA IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

February 12, 2008

Mr. FARR. Madam Speaker, I rise today to honor the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program. This program is a wonderful educational experience for both the intern who works in a congressional office, and for the office who receives an intern from the program. The program annually delivers some of Australia's best and brightest university students who have a passion for and commitment to civic engagement and public service to congressional offices for 2-month internships.

The Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program began in 2000 and since its inception I have been a proud participant. This year I welcomed a wonderful student-ambassador to my office, Stephanie Lyons, who has shared with us her experiences as a newcomer to Washington from the perspective of an Australian. Stephanie, who visits us from the University of Canberra, is a great example of the high quality students who are involved in this program. With a bachelor's degree in communication, specializing in public relations and political communication, Stephanie will this year commence her honors degree, drawing upon her experiences here in Washington as a research stimulus. Throughout her time in this office, she has had the chance to pursue her interests in the media and a range of issues, from foreign affairs, human rights, and diplomacy to science and the environment.

Over the past month, she has been an invaluable asset to this office. She has attended committee briefings, drafted constituent correspondence, and assisted my staff with research. Her Australian accent has garnered the attention of many of my constituents on tours and over the phone. She is often asked to share her experiences in Washington, DC. …

Madam Speaker, I strongly encourage my colleagues to seek international connections by participating in this rewarding program. It is truly heartening to see how much this program has grown over the years, and I look forward to its continued success. I ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing the contributions of the Uni-Capitol Internship Program and, again, thank Stephanie Lyons for her participation and hard work.

RECOGNIZING THE UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAM

SPEECH OF HON. ALCEE L. HASTINGS OF FLORIDA IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

March 5, 2008

Mr. HASTINGS of Florida. Madam Speaker, I rise today to recognize the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program. Since the inception of the Uni-Capitol program, I have participated in this relationship building program that brings some of Australia's best and brightest future leaders to Washington. I have benefited greatly by the work of unique and talented individuals that produced top-notch work to both of my offices….This is the first year that I have also hosted an intern at the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe in my capacity as Chairman.

I have been pleased to host two amazing young women, Siobhan Coughlan and Katrina Mae.

Siobhan Coughlan, who is in her third year at the University of Queensland, first arrived in the Helsinki Commission's office on January 3, 2008, and since then has provided able, thorough, and important assistance to the professional staff of the Commission. Over the past two months with the Commission, Siobhan has demonstrated her honorable personal character and integrity in the way she confronted the topic of human rights and democratic principles and the manner in which she interacted with staff on economic development and tolerance issues in a domestic and international context. Siobhan has served our organization in a number of capacities, and at each stage has proven to be valuable because of her professionalism, her drive to succeed, and her ability to work well within a group dynamic. Siobhan always demonstrated the highest level of conscience in keeping the respectability of our program as she sought to achieve our common goals. Siobhan brought her courteous and positive demeanor to hearings, briefings and events that the Commission held and events she attended on behalf of the staff here at the Commission.

Much as been gained by having an international student at our side and Siobhan has greatly contributed her experiences, ideas, and thoughts that are shared by our good Australian friends across the water. I am delighted that she's able to extend her internship for another two months.

In her short time here, Katrina Mae has become an indispensable asset to my office. An undergraduate law student at the University of Wollongong, Katrina came to my office with an ardent interest in civil rights and a desire to work with individuals who support policies that encourage tolerance and cooperation across racial and cultural lines. Over the course of her two months, she has attended hearings and briefings on a myriad of policy issues, drafted countless constituent correspondence, assisted visitors and callers in her always patient and thoughtful manner, and helped several staffers with legislative research and special projects. While her professional skills and academic credentials are certainly impressive, Katrina is also an absolute pleasure to work with. No matter the assignment, she is always eager to help and approaches every new task with a smile. The anecdotes of her adventures as a first-time visitor to the United States were a constant source of entertainment, and her tales of life in Australia gave our office a greater understanding of her country's rich history, culture, and values.

Katrina arrived on Capitol Hill hoping to acquire a better understanding of the U.S. legislative process, and it is my sincere hope that she benefited as much from this experience as we did from having her with us. …
Over the last nine years, my staff and I have greatly benefited from the relationships that have been made from the result of this program as it continues to provide all of us an extraordinary experience with our friends on the other side of the ocean. It has been a great privilege to host Siobhan and Katrina and I ask all my colleagues to extend their open arms to the Uni-Capitol Internship Program and to our Australian friends in the future.

SPEECH OF HON. JOE COURTNEY OF CONNECTICUT IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JANUARY 27, 2009

Mr. COURTNEY. Madam Speaker, for decades the United States has worked closely with Australia on issues of great importance to our two nations. Australia has stood out among the international community as a friend of the United States and remains one of our closest cultural, economic and security partners. It is in this spirit that a program was launched 10 years ago to further foster those close ties. Since that time, the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program has delivered to the United States approximately 100 of Australia's best and brightest to serve as interns in a variety of Federal agencies and congressional offices.

During my first term in Congress, I was privileged to welcome Anthony "A.J." Bremmer to my office. Anthony was a welcome addition to my congressional staff and he quickly became an integral part of the team. When the opportunity arose again this winter to participate in the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program, I immediately agreed to welcome another Australian "ambassador." Jehane Sharah, much like A.J., has quickly become a valued part of our staff. Jehane has demonstrated a maturity and a curiosity beyond her college years. Prior to coming to the United States, Jehane worked for two members of the Australian parliament. This experience has helped her flourish during her short time in Washington. She has attended briefings, assisted constituents, and worked with my staff on a variety of research initiatives. Jehane also has an extensive background in communications, serving as a senior reporter for a newspaper in Canberra. As a result, she has assisted my communications director on a number of important projects. Jehane truly is an exceptional ambassador for the people of Australia.

Many of my colleagues have also been privileged to welcome students like Jehane to their offices…. From my experience, it is clear that this program will help foster a new generation of understanding and shared experiences between our two countries. One example of this can be seen in a recent feature piece written by Jehane for the Sunday Canberra Times. The article details her experience at the inauguration of President Obama, an event that united not only the people of our country, but those around the world as well…. Madam Speaker, as Members of Congress we have a responsibility to our constituents back home and an opportunity to reach out to people across the globe. It is with that in mind that I would encourage all of my colleagues to open their doors to students from around the world so that they can share in our great democracy. Similarly, I would encourage American university students to travel abroad to learn about other cultures and governments and share their knowledge of our country. I ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing the contributions of the Uni-Capitol Internship Program and to once more thank Jehane Sharah for her dedication and hard work.

UNI-CAPITOL WASHINGTON INTERNSHIP PROGRAMME 2009

STATEMENT OF SENATOR MIKE CRAPO OF IDAHO

January 27, 2009

Mr. CRAPO. Mr. President, I am proud to be involved for a third year in the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Programme, UCWIP, an exchange program in which outstanding college students from Australia's top universities compete to serve as interns for the U.S. Congress. The program is in its 10th year of bringing the Washington experience to our friends from Australia, firsthand. In addition to working in congressional offices, the program provides students with a number of other opportunities and activities including visits to historic sites, visits to government agencies, meetings with government leaders, and educational events.

This year, Nicholas Tam, a student from Melbourne University in Australia, is taking a 2-month hiatus from his law degree to help me serve Idaho constituents. Of the program, Nick says, "Working with Senator Crapo has been a gateway to developing a nuanced, sophisticated understanding of the United States and its precise position and role in the world. UCWIP has been culturally enriching and enhancing of my own professional development. It has been a real privilege to aid in the advancement of strong conservative principles whilst working here in the United States Senate." Nick is a terrific temporary addition to my staff and, like past interns, an intelligent individual, hard worker and personable…. [T]his educational and highly successful exchange program has earned a rightful place among leading international academic exchange opportunities. I am honored to continue to participate in this well-crafted and successful program.
MATTERS OF PUBLIC INTEREST

Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program

Senator Concetta FIERRAVANTI-WELLS (New South Wales) (12.47 p.m.)—I rise today to speak about a very interesting and important program for young Australians. University students from across Australia are being given an opportunity to intern in the United States Congress in Washington, DC through a program now known as the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program. The success and growth of the program has been in large part due to the manner in which these young Australians have acquitted themselves in the US Congress. We should be proud of the way these students have served as ambassadors for themselves, for their universities and for Australia. They have done this nation and the Australian people numerous proud acts of public service, which I hope will continue for many years to come.

There are so many common values between our two countries and yet there is such a huge physical distance between us which means that contacts between individuals can be very difficult to achieve. We see in our Prime Minister and President Bush the value of a solid professional and personal relationship. The relationships these students are developing are important, particularly because the future strength of the alliance between our two countries is not going to be just about economic and military relationships but is going to very much depend on the people to people strengths that will develop in us an understanding of each other. I congratulate the students who have already acted as ambassadors for our country and ensured the growth of this program. I would encourage future university students to utilise opportunities like this when they are made available to them.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program

Mr. Warren SNOWDON (Lingiari, Northern Territory) (4.49 p.m.)—Every year for the past seven years, students from around Australia have undertaken a journey, travelling halfway around the world, often at their own expense, in order to learn about another culture, to witness another system of government and to work as part of the United States Congress. The students undertake this journey as part of the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program, a program which offers university students around Australia the chance to undertake an eight-week internship in a congressional office in Capitol Hill, Washington DC.

The Program facilitates this by enabling the formation of genuine friendships and the exchange of views and ideas between the Australian interns and their respective offices. I have often enjoyed the interaction that has occurred between my Australian and American interns. This, my colleagues, is how we build relationships which will ensure that the U.S. and Australia remain friends and allies for years to come.

Programs like this give young Australians a once in a lifetime opportunity. This program provides students with a strong interest in civics and in progressing and developing our nation further through new ideas and new policies with an avenue through which to gain invaluable skills, knowledge and understanding and experience that will help them achieve their goals and, in turn, make their own contribution for the benefit of others.

Young Australians will go on to work all around the globe in a variety of fields and careers, as we know. It is important, however, that we have programs that offer dedicated students who have an interest in public service and public office places where they can come to learn and experience. We need to continue to foster such educational and employment opportunities so that we can continue to have a strong and vibrant pool of individuals who are equipped to represent and work for the Australian public.

I commend the many people who have made such a program possible—the congressional hosts, the variety of people and organisations that have taken time to meet and help the students during their stay, the universities involved in the program and the program coordinators who make this possible. Without their help and the help of many others, this opportunity would not be available to our students.

For the last 6 years, UCWIP has organized and co-hosted receptions honoring the interns and their Congressional hosts on Capitol Hill. The gatherings have been co-sponsored by the Australian Embassy in Washington, DC and by participating Australian universities. These are scenes from the February 11, 2009 event on Capitol Hill.

As one of the five inaugural participants in 2000 in the Uni–Capitol Washington Internship Programme I felt a great sense of pride in being able to represent my university and Australia in Washington DC.

The internship was an amazing opportunity which allowed me to gain a valuable working understanding of the political process in America by interning in the Office of Congresswoman Loretta Sanchez. The Congresswoman had a particular interest in US foreign policy and was the ranking woman on the House Armed Services Committee. This particularly appealed to me and I was fortunate enough to be able to attend both an Armed Services and International Relations Committee hearings. Another highlight was attending a lecture given by then President Bill Clinton.

Washington DC and in particular the Capitol are amazing. There is a lot about the history of the United States that can be learnt from DC and being able to experience it in such a unique way is remarkable. Australia and the United States are alike in so many ways and have a long history of shared values, particularly evident in our close security relationship. Working as an intern gives a small insight into what binds our two countries.

The support from Eric Federing and his wife Daphne Clones Federing is what ensured the experience was professional and very worthwhile but also that we felt secure in traveling so far from home. Visiting the Australian Embassy in Washington also provided an interesting look at the work Australians are doing overseas and their support was also appreciated.

After completing my International Relations degree the internship programme encouraged me to pursue a career in politics in Australia which has lead me to my employment with the Prime Minister of Australia, Hon John Howard MP. I thoroughly encourage anyone considering the internship programme to seize the opportunity and then make the experience your own.

The Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program really does offer a once in a lifetime opportunity, on so many levels. First, there’s the experience of simply being inside Capitol Hill with all of its energy and its ‘buzz’. Walking inside the halls, each painted with unique history; witnessing on a daily basis what we would only ever catch a glimpse of in a heavily truncated news bulletin at home; being a small part of the whole ongoing political process.

Secondly, there’s the work experience – an area largely dependent on your own enthusiasm and entrepreneurship. Working with other interns, liaising with senior staff, researching policy, attending press conferences, sitting in on committee hearings - how much you get out of the experience largely depends on you. Representing your country as one of a very small handful of Australians working on the hill provides you with an important ambassadorial role as well. But it’s also an opportunity to make new and long-lasting friendships with your UCWIP group, and with people you meet in and around Washington, DC.

Thirdly, there’s the ability to deepen your understanding of U.S. history and culture through exploring the surrounds of Washington’s many monuments and museums; through visits to Gettysburg, Philadelphia’s Independence Hall, Congress Hall; or through trips to New York, Boston or wherever your weekends take you.

But more than anything it’s a chance to more wholly develop an understanding. Not just of the United States, but of what it means to be an Australian representing your country abroad, and in such an exciting environment. This program offers not just the chance to build upon your own knowledge and skills, but also to share your ideas and to exchange your views - to learn, but also to teach. It is these broader experiences, skills and relationships that will continue to serve you, as they have me, long after the internship itself is over.

Internship: Del. Eni Faleomavaega

It's one thing to debate issues such as climate change or Iraq in a university classroom, but getting the chance to be on the floor when those debates are battled out in front of you and the players are people like Condoleezza Rice and Barack Obama ... that’s something else.

My experience as an intern on the hill was one of the best experiences of my life. My time was spent in the office of Congressman Eni Faleomavaega, someone who inspired me with his ability to voice, not only the concerns of his American Samoan constituents, but those of many other people world-wide by bringing their stories of human rights violations, natural resource degradation and other cultural exploits to the House floor. For many interns, your Congressman will be your first real boss in the working world, so having a Congressman or woman who pushes the boundaries and inspires you and your workmates to really fight hard, can have a life-long impact.

The UCWIP is different to what you may expect in an internship program. The focus is on the individual, on building relationships and opportunities. From the individual side, Eric and Daphne Federing will work with you to ensure you feel at ease in your new home and office overseas. In terms of opportunities, provided you turn up with a hard-working, open mind attitude, you will be given many opportunities to contribute to your office in more ways than you can imagine: Darfur, Asia-Pacific security, 911 and global sustainability are just some of the many issues that the UCWIP interns have worked on over the past few years. And your office colleagues will be just as memorable. I now live in DC and still pop up to the Hill, now and again, and say G'day to all the office staff.

The UCWIP was nothing short of life changing for me. The friendships formed are life-long and I couldn't imagine a better way to travel, get real-world experience and kick-start your career.

Internship: Joint Economic Committee

Participating in the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program represents a unique opportunity to see the inner workings of the United States Congress. Although the actual tasks interns do are often straightforward, immersion in the political life of the capital offers a great range of challenges, and complements academic study of US politics and society. For me, interning in Congress was a sort of 'boot camp' on America's political and economic life. Everybody I worked with knew a lot more about most things than I did, and were very generous with their time in teaching me what they knew.

The other highlight of the trip was spending a lot of time with like-minded Australians who were as interested in US politics as I was. It was always fun to end a day of work and debrief with the other interns. Offices differ from one to the next, from one year to the next, and even from one second to the next in how much time staff can take to get to know you. There are no real guarantees in that apart from goodwill and best intentions. There were still plenty of outside-work opportunities to see how things worked inside the Beltway. Not content to just place us in a Congressional office, Eric also organised a full program of briefings to give us a wider feel for what working in DC was like. In my year, we met with a National Journal editor, went to Foggy Bottom to hear from State Department officials, celebrated Australia Day at the Australian Embassy, and made a trip to Philadelphia.

The internship program is really more than just interning at Congress. It is a chance to learn a little bit more about what makes the United States what it is, and thus to understand one of the countries that shapes the military, political and economic course of the rest of the world. I look back at my internship experience as one of the real highlights of my university years.

Challenging, rewarding, scary, exhilarating and beyond your wildest imagination. All phrases that describe this extraordinary experience known as UCWIP. The opportunity to get first hand experience in this most recognisable of world political institutions is without doubt awe inspiring. Working daily in the hustle of the Congress, you gain an insight on the many competing pressures associated with this completely different world.

I was the first Australian intern to be placed in my office, a proposition which was simultaneously nerve-racking and welcoming. There were no pressures or expectations associated with previous interns performances and I had the opportunity to craft my own experience as together the office personnel and I discovered this new experience. However, you are nervous to ensure that the experience is a positive one for the office, so that future interns are able to have access to, but never realised were there.

I had the great opportunity to attend a number of hearings of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and was fortunate enough to hear both Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice and former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright testify. Listening to these stalwarts of American Foreign Policy for the past 14 years was amazing, and there can be nothing but respect for their opinions.

This experience however is more than the experience of Washington DC. In one such experience we were lucky enough to be huddled with millions of others in Times Square, New York to celebrate New Years’ Eve, eating pizza and drinking coffee on the middle of Broadway! The electricity of the moment is enough to make the entire trip, however it is just one of the many experiences that form this endless stream of highlights, each of them forcing you to pinch yourself to ensure that it is real! And the people you share these experiences with become lifelong friends.

This is a once in a lifetime opportunity and the honour and privilege of undertaking it will leave you with an eternity of memories and a profound understanding of the US as a country and its close relationship with Australia.

When asked to describe to my internship changed me, a whole boatload of clichés and metaphors came to mind. All of the clichés fail to describe the enormous change that this programme can bring about; in fact trying to describe the plethora of effects that the Uni-Capitol Exchange programme had on my life is like trying to describe Lorenz’s ‘Butterfly Effect’. I feel like a tragic ‘Anthony Robbins’-esque clone when I say that it ‘took off my blinders and made me realise my full potential’.

The statement ‘this changed my life’ gets bandied about a lot, so I don’t think it captures it. Last night while watching TV I saw a hair removal product that would apparently change my life. If electrolysis can change my course, aspirations and outcomes in the way that my Uni-Capitol Exchange did, I think they’re seriously undercharging at only $89.95 per month for three months.

‘It opened doors’ wouldn’t really cover the effects either. The intern experience is universally acknowledged to be ‘amazing’ and ‘incredible’ (the look of awe and respect is something you never get tired of) and undoubtedly is admired by potential employers and networkers; but it also makes you consider other doors that were always open to you, that you always had access to, but never realised were there.

Having this experience behind you gives you the courage to put your hand up for more amazing opportunities that you wouldn’t have thought you could do before. The only comparison I can think of is that I’ve got “three wines worth of courage” flowing through my veins, without any of the associated giddiness or nausea. ‘Gaining confidence’ just doesn’t describe the leap forward.

The opportunities afforded through the exchange and the lasting support of Eric and my fellow interns simply couldn’t be replicated by another experience. The experience affects you as much as you choose to let it, and the broad interactions and experiences offered by the Uni-Capitol exchange ensure that those who want to learn, grow and develop will find endless opportunity to do so.
I am addicted to American Politics. I devour the news and the pundits, I argue, and I walk around in my “Obama 08” T-shirt. Most look at me puzzled and ask why do you care? Don’t get me wrong, I’m proud of our system and processes, but for Australians used to the height of excitement being the Speaker calling the House to “order”, the US political process is another world! We watch the West Wing with fascination. But it’s not until you stroll through the halls of Congress that you truly understand the absolute privilege it is to be a part of the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program.

I was matched as an intern with Rep. James E. Clyburn from South Carolina, then the Vice Chair of the Democratic Caucus, and now the Majority Whip. His staff were kind, encouraging, and exhibited healthy doses of good, Southern hospitality. The beauty of my experience was not so much the specific work that I undertook, namely, answering phones and startling South Carolinians with my accent and responding to constituent mail. Rather, my office understood that I was in DC to learn about and live the US political system and because of this, they prompted me to see and experience as much as I could on the Hill. I was taken to many meetings, attended House Democratic Caucus meetings open to House Democrats and leadership staff only, and participated in the Democratic Caucus 2004 Issues Conference as a staff member.

My internship was heightened by the wonderful people I met and befriended. The Clyburn staff, many of whom I still keep in contact with and have visited again, added colour to my working day. The program would not have been the same had it not been for the camaraderie of our group of Interns and our shared experiences. And of course, Eric and Daphne Federing, the most gracious, caring of hosts, and now my good friends. Year after year, Eric and Daphne give up their time, open up their home and share their lives with the interns. Each intern’s personal experience is paramount to Eric, evident in the fact that Eric will not match interns into offices where he does not have a connection he trusts to be fully welcoming.

Above all, the internship taught me to always be open to opportunities. I never thought I would be ‘picked’ as part of this program but it was too great an opportunity to let pass. And had I not applied, I would have missed out on three of the best months I’ve ever had.

It’s difficult to sum up the experience of the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program into a few simple paragraphs and really capture the ability of the program to enhance your academic and professional development. Many adjectives come to mind that go a small way to describing the experience – exciting, challenging, daunting, exhilarating, unique, and fun. And that’s probably only just described your first morning working on the Hill!

All of your experiences in the program, including the off-the-Hill opportunities arranged by Eric Federing, have the ability to shape your understanding of the different factors that influence how policy in Washington is formulated – provided you’re open to them. It might be gaining a greater appreciation for the concerns of constituents by talking to them over the phone in the congressional office you’re interning in; understanding a little more about US-Australia relations by listening to officials at the Australian Embassy or State Department; or simply getting a sense of American history with visits to Gettysburg and Philadelphia.

The internship program challenges you at many different levels to not only increase your own understanding of the American political process, but also articulate your own thoughts on different issues. You quickly learn that it’s not simply about learning and asking questions, but that it’s a two-way exchange of ideas, and that those you work with or the people you meet are also interested in hearing your thoughts and opinions on different issues, in addition to learning more about Australia.

I was very fortunate to return to Washington DC recently to complete my graduate studies, which also opened the door to furthering my experience on Capitol Hill, and off-the Hill as a research intern in an international affairs think tank. UCWIP ensured that I was aware of the various opportunities that are on offer in Washington, and how to seize them. If you’re interested in American politics and US-Australia relations, engaging in issues and challenging your assumptions, and meeting some fantastic people along the way – then this program is for you.
Enduring the numbing wintry chill while watching the inauguration ceremony of U.S President Barack Obama, a wave of emotion sweeps through you: exhilaration, ecstasy, disbelief, hope. It is a maelstrom of great moments, fantastic people and being at the forefront of American policy-making that distinguishes the Uni-Capitol Washington Internship Program.

I undertook my internship at the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe (CSCE), which focuses on reinforcing the trans-Atlantic relationship between the U.S and the OSCE region. I had the opportunity to attend Secretary of State Hilary Clinton’s confirmation hearing, witnessed the testimonial of Former Secretary of State Madeleine Albright on U.S relations with the Muslim world, Al Gore on climate change, and had lunch with the Commission’s Chairman, Senator Cardin. I wrote memorandums on U.S- Russia relations and the domestic Russian political scene in the aftermath of the Gazprom crisis, and on the U.S-Japan-OSCE relations for the first Japanese delegation visit in the new Obama administration. In the midst of the conclusion of the Israeli elections, I assisted in the preparation and organization of a congressional delegation to Israel, Syria and Austria. I also worked on promoting the cause of the European Roma minority and assisted in research on the NATO alliance and missile defense systems. I undertook legal analysis and case work associated to the executive order demanding the closure of Guantanamo Bay and the subsequent congressional resolutions, set up a database tracking the final destination of such detainees, and also case work focusing on revitalizing links between the U.S and European-based institutions, such as the ICC, ICJ and the European Court of Human Rights. The highlight however were the enduring friendships with the Commission’s legal and foreign policy advisors, and the fellow American interns – their generosity in sharing their expertise, the dinners, luncheons and drinks we shared, and of course, their delight at Tim Tams and Australian wine, but puzzled reaction to Cadbury Crunchie bars!

Outside of Capitol Hill work, Eric arranged for our cultural and historical immersion with Inauguration, visits to Gettysburg and Philadelphia, and meetings with Australian embassy staff and academics and American journalists. A multitude of monuments and museums (space, history, art, archives, animal, botanical and wax), transforming into fine ladies and handsome gentlemen for an Inaugural ball, joining the crowds for the Inaugural concert, a no-show Chinese New Year firecracker parade and Lincoln’s Bicentennial celebrations, fine dining at the Oval Room during D.C Restaurant Week, shopping in Georgetown, sampling the “must-do” Ben’s Chilli Bowl, Dupont Circle and Adams Morgan ethnic restaurants, markets and bars, and weekend trips to Boston and New York, characterized the splendid two months I spent in D.C.

At his inauguration, President Barack Obama announced that “we gather because we have chosen hope over fear, unity of purpose over conflict and discord.” The spirit of such sentiment underlies the UWCIP program, the work we have undertaken and contributed to, the lasting global friendships and networks we have nurtured and solidified, and the new way in which we perceive ourselves and the world.
